

SECONDARY EDUCATION - ENGLISH (A)

ENG 347	World Literature I (3 credits)
ENG 348	World Literature II (3 credits)

Courses in English include the study of writing, language, and literature. Writing courses are designed to teach strategies for producing clear, effective, and expressive written communication. Study of the English language is designed to teach language principles and history in order to foster informed attitudes toward varieties of language and language change. Courses in literature are designed to teach methods of literary interpretation through the study of representative works.

The Concordia University Ann Arbor School of Education adheres to the Michigan Test for Teacher Certification, which states that upon completion of the program, students will be able to:

- Understand that English is a dynamic language shaped by cultural, social, and historical influences
- Understand the different types of literature and the elements that are involved in writing, interpreting, and comprehending a piece of literature.
- Understand the different types of writing and be able to write and craft those varying pieces
- Understand and apply different techniques of reading comprehension
- Critique different types of literature, writings, and arguments and be able to coherently and clearly defend those critiques
- Teach English to 6-12 grade students
